

LOB/FLOP SHOT GOLF CLINIC

A Flop Shot, also known as a Lob Shot, is a short pitch shot played with a very high-lofted wedge (60 to 64 degrees) in order to create maximum height on the ball's trajectory. The intention is to send the golf ball on a high-arcing trajectory, steeply up and steeply down, so that when it lands on the green it stops quickly, with very little roll.

The Flop shot is a specialty shot in golf, typically played in order to get the ball over a hazard (such as a bunker) between the golfer and the flagstick; or from just off the green when the golfer is short-sided and needs the ball to stop very quickly once on the green.

Any time the golf ball is in a position where the golfer needs to get the ball into the air quickly on a steep trajectory, and then land the ball soft on the green, the flop shot is an option to be played.

A flop shot is typically played with a high-lofted wedge called a lob wedge. A lob wedge has around 60- to 64-degrees of loft and was originally created specifically to play lobs, aka flops. A flop shot can be played with other wedges if the golfer lays the clubface wide open in order to add loft, but the lob wedge is the ideal club.

This is a shot that we all need to know or at least have some idea how to play.

I will be discussing the following aspects:

- 1. The Stroke
- 2. Alignment
- 3. Swing Path
- 4. Clubface Direction
- 5. Answering any questions
- 6. Individual swing analysis
